We often read in novels how a seemingly respectable person has some terrible secret which has been concealed for years. There is an expression in English that describes this sort of situation. The terrible secret is called "a skeleton in the closet".

I once spent an uncomfortable weekend at my friend George's house. He showed me to the guest room, a room rarely used.

He told me to unpack my things and then come down to dinner. After I had stacked my shirts in an empty drawer, I decided to hang one of the two suits I had brought with me in the closet. I opened the closet door and then stood in front of it petrified. A skeleton was dangling before my eyes.

The sudden movement of the door made it sway slightly and it gave me the impression that it was about to leap out at me. Dropping my suit, I dashed downstairs to tell George. This was worse than a terrible secret; this was a real skeleton. But George was unsympathetic.

"Oh, that," he said with a smile as if he were talking about an old friend. "That's Sebastian... You forget that I was a medical student once."
